

The Israeli Pavilion Won the 2021 London Design Biennale Public Choice Medal

Last night, as part of the closing event of the 2021 London Design Biennale, we were very excited to hear the announcement that TAU's design for the Israeli Pavilion – The Boiler Room – has won the Public Medal, chosen by thousands of visitors who voted for their favourite installation from over 30 Pavilions and exhibitions at the festival.

I am proud that TAU has been part of this amazing accomplishment and applaud the design team from TAU's David Azrieli School of Architecture who despite the pandemic, persevered and saw their design through to the end. I am sure you all join me in congratulating our young and talented designers with a big 'Kol Hakavod'!

In other exciting news, yesterday it was revealed that a team of Israeli archaeologists discovered a new early humanoid, unknown to science until now, in an excavation near Tel Aviv. The findings might change our understanding of human evolution, said the team comprised of researchers from TAU's Dan David Center for Human Evolution and Biohistory Research, Shmunis Family Anthropology Institute, and the Sackler Faculty of Medicine, as well as a team from the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. You can learn more about this revelation in the 'News and Updates' section of this email.

All this news would not be possible without our generous donors around the world. Visit the 'Support Us' section below to learn how you can become one, to help Israel's future builders, designers and researchers, and be part of the next big idea.

Thank you, stay safe and Shabbat Shalom,

Cara G. Case
